Society for Health Systems recognizes Dr. James Benneyan, Executive Director of the Healthcare Systems Engineering Institute, with Lifetime Achievement Award

Dr. James Benneyan is among ten individuals to be recognized at the 2013 Society of Health Systems Conference. He is receiving this designation in recognition of his significant contribution and continued dedication to the field of healthcare systems engineering.

James Benneyan is one of the most prominent leaders in the field of healthcare systems engineering. In addition to being the founder and director of two healthcare engineering centers, he has held leadership positions in seven additional engineering research centers and laboratories. He has served as an officer for the Institute of Industrial Engineers, the Society for Health Systems and the Institute for Healthcare Improvement. As a professor, he has taught industrial engineering and operations research at Northeastern University, and has received six teaching, service, and research awards.

Dr. Benneyan is one of two members of the Healthcare Systems Engineering Institute to be recognized by the Society for Health Systems. His colleague, Dr. Vinod Sahney, was selected to receive this award as well.
